MARKET DAY

Happy New Year from the Central Hawkeyes and Cove, Amy and Jordan were busy getting ready for Jamboree Market Day.

The Hawkeyes created paracord men and paracord keyrings with charms. Last Jamboree they had the eye-dea and at their pre-Jamboree camp started making some of them. They also did nail painting as a fundraiser. Did you know that paracord can support 100kgs?

Their goal yesterday was to sell as many key rings and paracord men as they could. They has a number of the team that actively sold the paracord products on the Village Green.

Jordan, Amy and Cove wanted to say thanks to everyone for supporting them getting to Jamboree, meeting new friends and learning new skills

"It's been amazing."

SCOUT GENERATIONS

Allard from Taniwha Country spent some time yesterday with his parents, grandparents and sisters, who are both Cubs. His parents and grandparents are originally from The Netherlands. His grandfather went as a Scout to the 1963 World Jamboree in Greece and he was very pleased to see that Scouting is still flourishing. They were impressed with how well organised the Jamboree is.

Yesterday, they saw some bus loads of Scouts going to activities. It made them realise why the Jamboree costs so much, but is really great value for money. They were also impressed by the way each troop has its own identity, with their gateways and camp uniforms but they are still part of the whole Jamboree.

Well done to the New Zealand Jamboree team!

MARKET DAY CLOSE UP

Space Ducks stall, under a bright red gazebo had an inflatable unicorn paddling pool. Seth was out the front busking by 9.30 am and he already had a lot of bread tags.

Declan from the Troop said the Scouts got together and decided on the game of hooking numbered ducks from the paddling pool. Each number won a prize and a major prize of a leather patch signed by Baden Powell's grandson. There were many spot prizes, with heaps of interest in the rubber duck woggles.

MARKET DAY - WELLINGTON GALE, WESTERN SOUTHLAND, MARLBOROUGH GECKOS

Market day saw the Village Greens come alive. From nail painting, rubber ducks, dragonfly paracord keychains to dunking machines. Most things you could think of were available for purchase. Wellington Gale had an interesting mini golf obstacle course set up. In exchange for 2 tags you got a go on each of their four courses. Two led through pipes to the hole, while the other two required a straight shot to get a hole-in-one. According to the Scouts only one or two people had gotten a hole-in-one on these courses, which was “pretty skilled because it’s supposed to be difficult.”

Next door at the Western Southland stall the mysterious Fiordland Moose was in full force. The Scouts were attempting to feed the moose and if the ‘food’ made it out the other end they would go in the draw to win a prize.

The Western Southland Scouts came together at their pre-jamboree camp and brainstormed the mystery of the Fiordland Moose then used it to theme their troop and market day stall. Their stall looked absolutely terrific.

Down at the Maraetai Village Green the Marlborough Geckos were selling a range of gecko tattoos. Both their troop name and their market stall is inspired by the native Marlborough gecko that is currently endangered. The troop managed to sell out of tattoos by the end of the day “because of good marketing.” She also had her gecko mascot that every patrol leader from the contingent received. It’s name is Grecko and it is a pretty cool companion. Market was a huge success for many.

SPOT THE DIFFERENCE

Jamboree has changed over the years, or has it? These photos show two Jamboree sites both at Mystery Creek. At Jamboree NZ16, there were 3400 Scouts. How many do you think are at NZ22?
